Property Description

Casa Bromelia is a collaboration project between a group of adept architects, designers and engineers with their roots in Costa Rica and Germany and a passion for emotive but functional design. Their aspiration was to create a home in the Central Pacifico rainforest of Costa Rica that offers an inspiring, feel-good as well as functionally satisfying experience with nature playing the leading role. Immersed in the canopy of the surrounding trees, the house is almost floating ethereally above the jungle. Structurally this was achieved by using an engineered heavy steel beam platform as a base, much like a bridge, however discrete, supported on both ends but free and clear in between. Since the support is not obvious, the house appears to be suspended in the forest – you can actually pass underneath the house. This 4 bedroom home is level with the forest so you are not looking down on nature but harmoniously within and through it.
