Property Description

The Bolsero benefits from the same quality of construction and finishings as Tamarindo Preserve's most expensive residences. Beach living in Costa Rica doesn't get any better! The homes of Tamarindo Preserve have been designed with a guiding principle, a simple assumption, and an uncompromising mandate. The principle is that the homes must blend into their surroundings: rooftops will be low, materials will be rustic, their palette will be natural, and the architecture cannot attempt to compete with the beauty of nature itself. The simple assumption guiding the architects was that residents of the Preserve are there to embrace nature, rather than seal themselves off from it. Rooms look out on gardens, and conventional walls and windows are replaced at the Preserve by floor to ceiling panels that disappear to bring the outdoors inside. The uncompromising mandate is that all materials, all specifications, and all finishes must be authentic and of the highest quality.
